Convergence to Fight Toxic Prisons and Support Eco-prisoners

June 11-13 Washington, DC

www.fighttoxicprisons.org
June 11-12 CONVERGE and STRATEGIZE

FOR OVER A DECADE, June 11th has been a day of action in solidarity with eco-anarchists imprisoned for their actions in defense of the Earth. Since its inception in 2004, the June 11th day of action and other acts of solidarity have been instrumental in winning shorter sentences or early release for eco-prisoners, including Jeff Luers and Eric McDavid. Yet committed earth defenders such as Mar ius Mason, targeted in the FBI’s “Greenscare,” are still serving harsh sentences in maximum security prisons for their actions in defense of the Earth.

MEANWHILE IN APPALACHIA, the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) plans to build a massive maximum security prison, on top of a former mountaintop removal coal mine in Letcher County, Kentucky, surrounded by sludge ponds and coal processing operations. This amounts to an environmental justice nightmare, where prisoners who are disproportionately low-income and people of color face toxic conditions behind bars.

From June 11-13th people from around the country will converge on Washington, DC to network, strategize, and take direct action against toxic prisons and continue to fight for the freedom of political prisoners.

STOPPING ONE PRISON IS NOT A MAGIC BULLET to ending the U.S. police state, the one that gave way to world’s largest prison nation and in turn serves as the apparatus of repression that keeps the planet shackled to industrial capitalism. But it’s a pretty good place to build from.

June 13 - Shut Down the B.O.P.

We’ll bring the momentum of the weekend convergence into the streets on Monday to take direct action against the Bureau of Prisons’ plan to build their new maximum security prison in the coalfields of KY; and let those locked up for defending the Earth know they are not forgotten. Bring your affinity group, crew, friends, banners, noisemakers, and your desire for disruption.

www.fighttoxicprisons.org

June 11-12 CONVERGE and STRATEGIZE

FOR OVER A DECADE, June 11th has been a day of action in solidarity with eco-anarchists imprisoned for their actions in defense of the Earth. Since its inception in 2004, the June 11th day of action and other acts of solidarity have been instrumental in winning shorter sentences or early release for eco-prisoners, including Jeff Luers and Eric McDavid. Yet committed earth defenders such as Marius Mason, targeted in the FBI’s “Greenscare,” are still serving harsh sentences in maximum security prisons for their actions in defense of the Earth.

MEANWHILE IN APPALACHIA, the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) plans to build a massive maximum security prison, on top of a former mountaintop removal coal mine in Letcher County, Kentucky, surrounded by sludge ponds and coal processing operations. This amounts to an environmental justice nightmare, where prisoners who are disproportionately low-income and people of color face toxic conditions behind bars.

From June 11-13th people from around the country will converge on Washington, DC to network, strategize, and take direct action against toxic prisons and continue to fight for the freedom of political prisoners.

STOPPING ONE PRISON IS NOT A MAGIC BULLET to ending the U.S. police state, the one that gave way to world’s largest prison nation and in turn serves as the apparatus of repression that keeps the planet shackled to industrial capitalism. But it’s a pretty good place to build from.

June 13 - Shut Down the B.O.P.

We’ll bring the momentum of the weekend convergence into the streets on Monday to take direct action against the Bureau of Prisons’ plan to build their new maximum security prison in the coalfields of KY; and let those locked up for defending the Earth know they are not forgotten. Bring your affinity group, crew, friends, banners, noisemakers, and your desire for disruption.

www.fighttoxicprisons.org

June 11-12 CONVERGE and STRATEGIZE

FOR OVER A DECADE, June 11th has been a day of action in solidarity with eco-anarchists imprisoned for their actions in defense of the Earth. Since its inception in 2004, the June 11th day of action and other acts of solidarity have been instrumental in winning shorter sentences or early release for eco-prisoners, including Jeff Luers and Eric McDavid. Yet committed earth defenders such as Marius Mason, targeted in the FBI’s “Greenscare,” are still serving harsh sentences in maximum security prisons for their actions in defense of the Earth.

MEANWHILE IN APPALACHIA, the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) plans to build a massive maximum security prison, on top of a former mountaintop removal coal mine in Letcher County, Kentucky, surrounded by sludge ponds and coal processing operations. This amounts to an environmental justice nightmare, where prisoners who are disproportionately low-income and people of color face toxic conditions behind bars.

From June 11-13th people from around the country will converge on Washington, DC to network, strategize, and take direct action against toxic prisons and continue to fight for the freedom of political prisoners.

STOPPING ONE PRISON IS NOT A MAGIC BULLET to ending the U.S. police state, the one that gave way to world’s largest prison nation and in turn serves as the apparatus of repression that keeps the planet shackled to industrial capitalism. But it’s a pretty good place to build from.

June 13 - Shut Down the B.O.P.

We’ll bring the momentum of the weekend convergence into the streets on Monday to take direct action against the Bureau of Prisons’ plan to build their new maximum security prison in the coalfields of KY; and let those locked up for defending the Earth know they are not forgotten. Bring your affinity group, crew, friends, banners, noisemakers, and your desire for disruption.

www.fighttoxicprisons.org

June 11-12 CONVERGE and STRATEGIZE

FOR OVER A DECADE, June 11th has been a day of action in solidarity with eco-anarchists imprisoned for their actions in defense of the Earth. Since its inception in 2004, the June 11th day of action and other acts of solidarity have been instrumental in winning shorter sentences or early release for eco-prisoners, including Jeff Luers and Eric McDavid. Yet committed earth defenders such as Marius Mason, targeted in the FBI’s “Greenscare,” are still serving harsh sentences in maximum security prisons for their actions in defense of the Earth.

MEANWHILE IN APPALACHIA, the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) plans to build a massive maximum security prison, on top of a former mountaintop removal coal mine in Letcher County, Kentucky, surrounded by sludge ponds and coal processing operations. This amounts to an environmental justice nightmare, where prisoners who are disproportionately low-income and people of color face toxic conditions behind bars.

From June 11-13th people from around the country will converge on Washington, DC to network, strategize, and take direct action against toxic prisons and continue to fight for the freedom of political prisoners.

STOPPING ONE PRISON IS NOT A MAGIC BULLET to ending the U.S. police state, the one that gave way to world’s largest prison nation and in turn serves as the apparatus of repression that keeps the planet shackled to industrial capitalism. But it’s a pretty good place to build from.

June 13 - Shut Down the B.O.P.

We’ll bring the momentum of the weekend convergence into the streets on Monday to take direct action against the Bureau of Prisons’ plan to build their new maximum security prison in the coalfields of KY; and let those locked up for defending the Earth know they are not forgotten. Bring your affinity group, crew, friends, banners, noisemakers, and your desire for disruption.

www.fighttoxicprisons.org